Wallace new MPD chief

Mayor Courtney names acting Chief McKay as assistant

John Wallace

Ben McKay

By MARK CAMPBELL
Courier staff writer

Former Madison Police Chief and Jefferson County Sheriff John Wallace has been appointed police chief by Mayor Bob Courtney.

Wallace, who was Madison police chief from 2007 until he was elected to his first of two terms as sheriff in 2010, takes over for interim chief Ben McKay, who has been named assistant chief.

Wallace, now a School Resource Officer with Madison Consolidated Schools, was hired from a field of 68 candidates and will assume his new duties with the city Sunday, March 1.

"Strengthening our law enforcement presence, bringing much-needed resources to MPD, and assertively combating substance abuse issues through enforcement, prevention, and treatment are essential measures that must be taken to keep our community safe," said Courtney, who campaigned heavily on public safety, in a statement released by the city. "The appointment of a chief and assistant chief with the same ideals is the first and most crucial step in ensuring we accomplish our goals.

"Wallace and McKay will make an excellent team to bring our vision of community safety, which will focus on training and rewarding our team of law enforcement professionals to a reality. I am grateful they both have agreed to serve our community in this capacity," Courtney added.

"I am truly honored to have the opportunity once again serve the citizens of Madison as their police chief. I want to thank Mayor Courtney for his confidence in me to lead this group of outstanding men and women," said Wallace. "I am committed to providing the best public service to the citizens of Madison and will strive for the highest standards of integrity, professionalism, and effectiveness."

Wallace, a graduate of Shawe Memorial High School, is a member of the Prince of Peace Catholic Church, Elks Lodge, Knights of Columbus and Madison Moose Lodge.

Tree removal on East Main Street pains a resident

By MARK CAMPBELL
Courier staff writer

When work began on the Project 421 Gateway to Madison last year, TeriLu Adler was looking forward to the day she and other residents of the 700 block of East Main Street would face less traffic congestion going to and from their parking behind their homes to always busy Baltimore Street.

Adler knew the new access route that would funnel traffic from the Milton-Madison Bridge directly onto Main Street would reshape the roadway in front of her historic row house, but she involved herself in that process by becoming a member of the 421 Consulting Committee to make sure the big trees she so loves were spared.

She said architects assured Adler, a retired landscape architect, that while a new roadway, sidewalks and storm sewers were going would be built, no big trees would be sacrificed. And that's what makes Thursday's felling of the big sugar maple that had stood in front of her house for at least 100 years so disappointing.

"I very specifically asked the engineers if they would be taking out the old trees and they assured me they were not going to come down," Adler said Thursday. "My issue is being lied to. Someone should have informed the homeowners that they were cutting the trees and tearing out all their pocket gardens. I could have removed my pocket garden and now it's destroyed, too."

Adler said the first sign of trouble came when she noticed workers cutting a couple of smaller trees along East Main earlier in the project. She remembers at the time jokingly asking, "Do I need to chain myself to my old maple tree?"

She said she was told the plan was to preserve all of the older, bigger trees with the exception of one located closest to the intersec-

Major damage in Dupont fire

By COLLIN OVERTON
Courier staff writer

Firefighters fought a house fire in Dupont Friday morning that ended up destroying what was estimated to be more than half the structure and sending two residents to the hospital.

Two fire departments responded to the fire on Reynolds Road across the street from the Dupont Volunteer Fire Department, which was the primary company at the scene.

No one was believed to be seriously hurt but two were taken to King's Daughters' Hospital by first responders. Their identities were not known and the name of the owner of the structure could not be obtained.

Dupont Fire Chief George Canfield said the call came in around 6:35 a.m. and the fire department was there about 10 minutes later. Dupont was joined by Madison Township Volunteer Fire Department — the fire company with which Dupont has a mutual aide agreement — and was later joined by Vernon Township Volunteer Fire Department from Jennings County.

Ian Waller, president of the Dupont fire company, said it appeared the fire might have started in the bathroom and then spread to the attic, which firefighters still were hosing down an hour after the call. Volunteers had to refill tanker trucks at a nearby hydrant a few hundred feet away and drive back to the scene to get more water on the structure throughout the morning.

Waller said they had the blaze under control within an hour, but expected they would be dealing with the attic fire past noon Friday.

Canfield said damage to the house was about 50%. He said Dupont will investigate first and hand over to the state fire marshal if necessary.

A neighbor, Don Geer, was outside surveying the destruction.

"I was up at 5:30 this morning and I seen the lights but I didn't pay attention at first; I thought it was a school bus sitting out here," said Geer, a retired Muscatatuck State Developmental Center employee and vice chairman of North Vernon Wesleyan Church. "...if they were out here I'd come over to have a prayer with them."

Waller said the extra help from other fire companies has been necessary in recent years. Of the 15 to 20 firefighters at the scene, nearly half were from assisting departments.

"We just don't have manpower... three or four companies show up to get equal amount of manpower. Especially when you're on one for hours like this — it's pretty strenuous, so you gotta keep rotating and rehabbing and going back to it," he said.

Canfield agreed, saying the roughly 30-person force itself was not sufficient when most of the volunteers work outside of Dupont — many in Madison — which is more than 20 minutes away.

"It's been tough because everybody is working out of the area now, so it's tough to get everybody to come to the scene of the fire in the middle of the day," Canfield said.

Bowen sentenced to 5 years in prison, one on probation

By MARK CAMPBELL
Courier staff writer

A Madison man who has been in and out of trouble with the law since driving his car into a Madison Regatta crowd as an 18-year-old in 2006 has been sentenced to six years after pleading guilty to possession of a weapon during his arrest on drug charges on Nov. 5, 2019.

Michael Wayne Bowen, now 31, pleaded guilty to carrying a handgun without a license, a Level 5 felony, on Jan. 21 under a plea agreement that dismissed charges of possession of a firearm by a dangerous felon, possession of methamphetamine, possession of a syringe and visiting a common nuisance.

Senior Judge Richard Striegel, who was appointed to preside over the case when Jefferson County Circuit Judge D.J. Mote withdrew because he had dealt with Bowen in the past as the county's prosecutor, accepted the prosecution's recommendation Thursday.

Bowen will serve five of the six years in the Indiana Department of Corrections and one year in heavily supervised and monitored probation for drug rehabilitation including enrollment and completion of a resident Salvation Army Adult Rehabilitation Program. Failure to complete that program or failure to abide by terms of plea agreement could send Bowen back to prison to serve out his sentence. He received credit for 143 days served since his incarceration on Nov. 5, including 107 actual days and 36 days in earned good time.

After the hearing, Jefferson

Michael Bowen

County Prosecutor David Sutter said "based on the facts we had in the case, the gun was going to be the easier charge to prove. He had admitted to having it."

Bowen had been arrested by Madison Police in the parking lot at Walmart on Nov. 5 and methamphetamine, a syringe, and a .25-caliber Raven Auto pistol — chambered with four bullets — were recovered from a 2002 white Ford Escort registered in his name. There were other occupants of the car who were allegedly using drugs with Bowen but he admitted ownership of the handgun.

Sutter noted that the felony Bowen pleaded guilty to carried a sentence of one to six years in prison so the agreement landed on the highest end of the penalty range and gives Bowen not only prison time but another chance to go straight.

The counseling and rehabilitation program could be Bowen's last chance to avoid a lengthy prison sentence since Thursday's felony conviction moves him closer to Indiana's habitual offender enhancement. He has two additional felony convictions as an adult.

"He's been to the DOC before and he's edging very close to habitual offender," said Sutter, noting Bowen is now eligible to have any future felony sentence enhanced based on the state's habitual felony offender enhancement. "He's in the process of accumulating enough felony convictions that we'd look at habitual offender in the future."

Sutter also noted that while Bowen was still a teenager when the Regatta incident took place 13 years ago, that does not factor into a lesser sentence in his opinion since Bowen was 18 at the time. Bowen and a passenger in his vehicle as well as eight Regatta spectators — three of whom were critically injured — were taken to the hospital when he drove his car through a spectator area and into the Ohio River at the foot of Jefferson Street during the 2006 Madison Regatta after smoking marijuana and huffing a propellant to get high.

"He was an adult then and he's an adult now," Sutter said. "He's an adult committing felony offenses."

Bowen appeared in Jefferson Circuit Court Tuesday wearing gray and black-striped, jail-issue clothes with Scott County Jail listed on the back of the top. A family member, other inmates and officers and officials of the court looked on in the courtroom as he was sentenced — far fewer than the number of onlookers who were on hand for his initial arraignment back in 2006.

Indiana Beach amusement park closes after 94 years

Indiana

MONTICELLO — An amusement park that entertained generations of visitors with rides, midway attractions and lakeside concerts for nearly a century has closed, park officials said Wednesday, citing the park's disappointing performance. Indiana Beach, which opened in 1926 and was initially called Ideal Beach, offered roller coasters and other rides from its lakeside site on Lake Shafer in Monticello. The park was long known for its slogan and jingle, "There's more than corn in Indiana." Park officials confirmed that the business had been shuttered after 94 years of operation in a statement issued Wednesday, a day after news of the closure broke. The statement said that "despite significant effort and a great deal of investment in infrastructure and rides, we have not seen an improvement in operating results," WLFI-TV reported. "As such, we made the difficult decision to cease operations. This was not a decision entered into lightly," according to the statement. California-based Apex Parks Group had purchased Indiana Beach in 2015 from Morgan Recreation Vacations of Saratoga Springs, New York. Apex's purchase marked only the second change the park's ownership after the founding Spackman family sold it to Morgan. That sale included the amusement park, its campgrounds and hotel. The park's closure shocked residents and business leaders in Monticello's Twin Lakes region, so-named for Lake Shafer and adjacent Lake Freeman, both of which are popular with summer visitors. "We didn't see this coming at all," Randy Mitchell, White County's economic development director, told the Journal & Courier. Indiana Beach and Apex were sued last year after a 12-year-old Lafayette boy died in June 2019 while riding the amusement park's Hoosier Hurricane roller coaster. That lawsuit is pending. In its heyday, crowds descended each summer on the amusement park, which played host over the decades to prominent acts, including The Who, The Beach Boys, Alice Cooper, The Turtles and Sonny & Cher. Fred Feigel of Lafayette said he was among about 100 people who attended a 1968 performance of Big Brother & the Holding Company, featuring Janis Joplin. He recalled that many park visitors didn't know who Joplin was and she was able to roam freely during a break in the band's performance. "During the break, Janis was in the midway around the games and the rides and nobody was hassling her. She was just having a good old time," Feigel told the Journal & Courier.

Review ordered of Lake Michigan shore damage

INDIANAPOLIS — The governor has told state agencies to calculate the damage along the Lake Michigan shoreline that's been caused by high water before possibly seeking federal assistance. The order announced Thursday comes as several lakeshore communities have already declared local beach erosion emergencies with waves damaging property and threatening roads. The Indiana Department of Homeland Security has declined to declare a state emergency, but Gov. Eric Holcomb said he wanted a new review after viewing the shoreline by helicopterSunday. The erosion is happening as Lake Michigan approaches its highest levels in recorded history and forecasters expect the Great Lakes to remain high well into 2020. State Senator Karen Tallian, an Ogden Dunes Democrat, called Holcomb's action "long overdue" as she asked the governor for an emergency declaration almost two months ago. "I do thank the governor for finally getting involved, and I hope that an emergency declaration is issued as quickly as possible," Tallian said. Michigan's erosion and flooding damage from the Great Lakes has been extensive, with officials estimating the costs of long-term road repairs and upgrades could reach $100 million. Holcomb is having Indiana agencies collect damage information to determine whether it is extensive enough to declare a state-level emergency and apply for federal disaster aid. His order also directs officials to expedite the review of permit requests for projects aimed at protecting shoreline properties.

Pizza parlors fined after shootings unreported

GARY — State regulators have fined two pizza parlors for failing to report the on-the-job shooting deaths of two delivery drivers slain last fall during armed robberies. The Indiana Occupational Safety and Health Administration fined Rico's Pizza $750 and Luigi's Pizzeria $1,500 for not reporting the shooting deaths, The (Northwest Indiana) Times reported. Under the law, any employee death that results from "a work-related incident" must be reported to the Occupational Safety and Health Administration. Phillip Hearne, 60, of Gary was shot to death in his vehicle during an Oct. 26 robbery while making a delivery for Rico's Pizza, according to a state safety order. No arrests have been made in his killing. David J. Shelton, 30, of Portage was fatally shot on Nov. 24 in a botched robbery while making a delivery for Luigi's Pizzeria. Two Gary men have been charged with murder and robbery resulting in serious bodily injury in his killing.

Beshear moves to speed jobless claims

FRANKFORT — Gov. Andy Beshear is pledging to speed up unemployment insurance claims by improving staffing at career centers around the state. Beshear announced Wednesday that current staff have been retrained in 12 local centers to help people seeking unemployment insurance. Beshear said that has led to decreased wait times. Beshear said the previous administration removed customer service staff from the career centers and asked citizens to email or call Frankfort to request benefits. Beshear said his administration also plans to increase staffing at the centers and start an online chat option on the website. Beshear also said the Labor Cabinet is working to recover more than $560,000 in workers compensation special funds that were overpaid.

Woman pleads guilty to manslaughter in crash

NEWPORT — A woman pleaded guilty on Thursday to manslaughter in a car crash that killed a white supremacist leader. Emily Sherry, 24, entered her plea in the April 2018 death of Robert Ransdell, 37. Sherry was driving under the influence on Interstate 275 when she veered into oncoming traffic and struck Ransdell's car, police had said. The vehicle flipped multiple times before colliding with a tree and pinning Ransdell under the car's tire, according to police. Sherry's blood alcohol level was recorded at 0.422, which is five times more than the legal limit, according to police, who said Sherry also tested positive for marijuana. Ransdell was the leader of Cincinnati operations of the National Alliance, which has been described as a mostly defunct white supremacist group with deeply anti-Semitic and anti-immigrant beliefs. He also ran unsuccessfully for the U.S. Senate in Kentucky in 2014.

Woman enters plea in killing of spouse, kids

WILLIAMSBURG — A woman entered an Alford plea Wednesday in the fatal shootings of her husband and two children. Courtney Taylor, 44, entered the plea to three counts of murder while appearing in Whitley Circuit Court for a pretrial hearing, news outlets reported. An Alford plea means Taylor did not admit guilt, but acknowledged the prosecution had enough evidence for conviction. Taylor was charged in 2017 with killing her husband, Larry, and daughters, Jolie and Jessie. Her trial was set to start next month. Prosecutors recommended a life sentence without parole. Formal sentencing was set for April 8.

Intoxicated babysitter with 6 unrestrained kids

HARTFORD — Six children not wearing seatbelts were reportedly riding in an SUV driven by their babysitter, who police in Kentucky said was speeding and driving under the influence. Krislon Talbott, 18, was pulled over Wednesday on I-165 in Ohio County after Kentucky State Police clocked her driving 97 mph in a 70 mph zone, news outlets reported. A "strong odor of marijuana" was coming from the car and Talbott appeared intoxicated, according to troopers. She was given a field sobriety test, which police said she failed. Three children were found unrestrained in the back seat, and during the course of the traffic stop, another three were found sleeping in the rear cargo space of the SUV. Social services took possession of the children, who were all younger than five, police said. Two other women, Peyton Coomes, 19, and Allison Frazier, 20, were also in the vehicle. The pair and Talbott were reportedly jointly babysitting the children.

2 face child solicitation charges in 2 area cases

Courier staff report

Authorities in Switzerland County and Indiana State Police made arrests on unrelated child solicitation charges in connection with cyber crime investigations.

A 40-year-old Bennington man has been charged with solicitation of a minor and dissemination of harmful information to a minor in connection with the investigation into cyber crimes in Switzerland County.

Daniel L. Scranton was arrested Tuesday in Jefferson County on a warrant for Switzerland County charging him with child solicitation, a Level 5 felony, and dissemination of matter harmful to a minor, a Level 6 felony. He appeared in Switzerland County Circuit Court where a plea of not guilty was entered on his behalf and bond was set at $3,000 cash.

The arrest came at the conclusion of a Switzerland County Sheriff's Office investigation into social media use. Scranton is being held in the Switzerland County Jail in Vevay.

Jon W. Anthony

On Thursday, troopers with the Indiana State Police Versailles Post arrested a 21-year-old Jennings County man on charges of child molesting and child solicitation.

Jon W. Anthony, of North Vernon, was arrested on a warrant charging him with one count of child molesting and one count of child solicitation, both Level 4 felonies.

The investigation by Indiana State Police Detective Andrew Mitchell began when allegations of child molesting were made against Anthony.

The nvestigation uncovered evidence that Anthony molested a child younger than 14 at a location in Jackson County and also contacted a second child younger than 14 on social media and attempted to solicit that child for sexual contact.

Anthony was arrested Thursday without incident at his residence. He was taken to Jackson County Jail pending his initial appearance in the Jackson County Circuit Court.

Bill to obscure addresses of crime victims advances

By WHITNEY DOWNARD
Goshen News

INDIANAPOLIS — Lawmakers voted Wednesday to advance a bill that would allow more crime victims to become part of the state's Address Confidentiality Program.

Run by the state Attorney General's Office, the program obscures the addresses of certain crime victims on government websites and doesn't permit landlords to list their addresses in a registry.

"We already administer this program, and we have for very many years," said Parvonay Stover, the director of Government Affairs & Legislative Policy for the attorney general.

About 350 Hoosiers participate in the program, which accepts only victims of domestic violence, sexual assault or stalking who have protective orders.

Senate Bill 424 would expand applicable crimes to include harassment, human trafficking, intimidation and invasion of privacy and would eliminate the protective order requirement and add out-of-state crime victims.

"That seemed like an easy solution to make sure everyone is protected," Stover said, "no matter where they're coming from."

The program at the attorney general's office assigns victims post office boxes, where employees of the office collect and redistribute the mail, according to Stover.

House representatives in the Courts and Criminal Code Committee expressed concerns about people using the program to elude federal authorities and creditors.

Stover said she'd asked those same questions upon joining the attorney general's office.

"I asked … Do people try to hide in illegitimate ways using this program?" Stover said. "And frankly, it doesn't happen."

The attorney general's office vets applicants and revokes participants who commit crimes at their confidential address, she said.

Because of concerns over the language of the bill and the power it would give to the attorney general, two representatives voted against it. But the bill still advanced out of committee and will go before the full House for consideration.

Madison man charged

Driver fails to yield to officer; rams back of 2nd police vehicle

Courier staff report

A Madison man has been charged with felony resisting law enforcement with a vehicle and endangerment after failing to yield to a Madison Police Department officer making a traffic stop and hitting another patrol car that was executing an unrelated traffic stop.

Police said Zachary Joseph-Heath Dulaney, 26, of Madison, displayed signs of impairment after the incident. He was arrested and charged with resisting law enforcement with a vehicle, a Level 6 felony, and operating a vehicle while intoxicated and endangerment, both misdemeanors.

The incident took place at 11:47 p.m. Tuesday, Feb. 18, when MPD Lt. Season Jackson attempted to stop a white 2013 Chevrolet Malibu near the 800 block of Green Road after observing the vehicle swerve into oncoming traffic.

Jackson activated her emergency lights, but the vehicle failed to yield and began to speed up while continuing to travel westbound on Green Road.

Senior Patrolman Seth Melton and Patrolman Cameron Blankenship were both near the intersection of Green Road and Maple Street on a separate traffic stop, when the vehicle Jackson was trying to stop hit the back of Melton's stationary police cruiser just two-tenths of a mile later.

Because the accident involved a Madison Police vehicle, the Jefferson County Sheriff's Department was conducted the investigation. No one was injured in the crash but Dulaney was checked out at the scene by King's Daughters' Hospital EMS.

According to court records, Dulaney was lodged in Jefferson County Jail but has since been released on bond. He appeared in Jefferson Superior Court on Feb. 19.

Hanover woman arrested in booking; meth found

Courier staff report

A Hanover woman is facing felony drug charges of trafficking with an inmate after she failed to disclose methamphetamine in her possession while being processed early Thursday morning into the Jefferson County Jail after her arrest on a warrant issued by Jennings County.

Melody R. Pedigo, 42, was arrested at 1:58 a.m. on charges of trafficking with an inmate and possession of methamphetamine after jail staff discovered a container with multiple plastic bags containing methamphetamine on Pedigo in the booking area of the jail.

Jefferson County Chief Deputy Josh Taylor said no drugs actually made it into the inmate population during the incident because the container was discovered in the intake area. He said jail staff asked Pedigo if she had any drugs or contraband prior to a search, so when the drugs were later found she was charged with both possession and trafficking.

"Inmates coming into the jail can easily overlook a marijuana joint or a prescription pill so we always ask them if they have anything before they are processed to give them a chance to declare that," Taylor said. "When they don't declare it and it's later found they are charged. Some people try to sneak something in in their bra, underwear or a body orifice and that's purposeful and they are charged."

He said if inmates are successful in sneaking drugs like methamphetamine into the jail, the drugs are easily administered by snorting or absorption.

The charges, both felonies, are in addition to charges Pedigo is facing on the warrant from Jennings County. The Jennings warrant also charges Pedigo with failure to appear on charges of possession of methamphetamine, possession of marijuana and possession of paraphernalia there.

Madison schools update vaping situation, outline education, action plans

Courier staff report

Late Wednesday afternoon, Feb. 19, 2020, Madison Consolidated Schools issued a news release to update the situation involving vaping cases at the high school.

They also announced work on a comprehensive plan including adult education, assistance and prevention, and increased student discipline measures.

"At this time, we are still waiting on final results from the state toxicology lab", said School Safety Coordinator and SRO Jacob McVey. "Our law enforcement partners have been very helpful in getting us an expedited analysis due to the nature of the activity we are seeing at our school."

The release said that since Feb. 6, five MCHS students have been transported to the emergency room in 9 trips with symptoms linked to vaping. "Of the five students, two account for 5 of the 9 trips," the release said.

"We feel as though this behavior and these poor choices are coming from a very low percentage of our overall student body," said Superintendent Dr. Jeff Studebaker. "This behavior is not indicative of the character of our overall student body".

On Tuesday, two adults and three more students had been transported to the emergency room after becoming ill in the same vicinity of the building. A vaping device was reported to have been found in a classroom in that wing of the building, but, the release said it was "unclear if these events were linked to prior events the week before. All aspects of the investigation are still ongoing."

The release said the district had finalized a comprehensive approach to continue efforts to combat the use of vaping devices.

"Our hope is that these additional measures will help educate our community on the dangers of this type of behavior, assist parents in what to look for, get help for a student who wants to quit vaping and make it more unpleasant for those who continue down this path of self-destruction," Studebaker said. "We wish to thank our community and law enforcement partners who have worked with us tirelessly to get to the bottom of this matter.

"The approach we plan to implement is three-pronged," Studebaker said. "We will continue to work with other community partners and healthcare professionals to raise awareness through educational opportunities, encourage our students to seek help in order to begin the process of changing this addictive behavior, and will immediately implement stricter discipline measures for students who choose to continue to use this potentially deadly device and put others in harm's way."

As part of the assistance and prevention measures, the release said:

If a student comes forward and turns in their device actively seeking assistance in quitting, there will be no penalties to the student. We will work to offer/partner with those who offer immediate cessation classes and resources.

We will continue our increased adult presence in hallways and restrooms. We are exploring funding options and timelines for the installation of vaping detectors.

As part of the enhanced student discipline, which became effective Thursday, Feb. 20, the release said the school was adjusting the discipline policy specifically for vaping.

The policy will apply to both MJHS and MCHS and to campuses, buildings, grounds, and buses. The adjustments in the discipline policy. the release said, will override discipline in the student handbook

Here is how the policies were explained:

First offense

- Referral to law enforcement
- 5-day suspension
- Possible phone confiscation (if reasonable suspicion is met for analysis)

Second offense

- Immediate suspension pending expulsion
- Imposition of fines
- Referral to law enforcement

The release said that in addition, the district has been contacted by a national law firm and will be actively investigating the necessary steps to join a class-action lawsuit against the vaping industry.

It also said the school is "relieved and encouraged to report that there were no medical incidents reported from MCHS today. Attendance figures from the past several days show no dramatic deviation. In addition, there was no difference in our teacher attendance for the day."

Should all these products be avoided?

What's the difference between 'vaping' and 'e-cigarettes'?

By ALLISON KURTI

As concerns over vaping continue to grow, researchers and public health officials are investigating the causes as of Feb. 4, 2020 of more than 64 deaths and 2,700 illnesses in the United States. It's confusing even for experts.

The term "e-cigarette" refers to a battery-powered device used to inhale an aerosol that typically, but not always, contains nicotine, along with flavorings and other chemicals, but not tobacco.

The National Institute on Drug Abuse (NIDA) and the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention recognize e-cigarettes as a broad category that includes a variety of different products that operate similarly and contain similar components.

So, "e-cigarettes," "vapes," "vape pens," "Juul," etc., all refer to the same class of products, with "e-cigarette" being the product itself, and "vaping" referring to use of the product. The devices can have different uses.

Although e-cigarettes in the U.S. are regulated as tobacco products rather than smoking cessation tools, Juul – the biggest maker of these devices – has marketed its product as a way for smokers to quit tobacco, with its website saying that its products are a "satisfying alternative to cigarettes." There are other vaping products, however, that are designed more to inhale THC.

What is the cause of vaping-related lung injuries?

The lung illnesses and deaths associated with using these products are sometimes referred to as "e-cigarette, or vaping, product use-associated lung injury" or EVALI. We know that 84% of those who have died reported vaping THC, either exclusively or in combination with nicotine. Many obtained their product that contained THC, the psychoactive ingredient in marijuana, through informal sources such as friends or in-person or online dealers.

CDC laboratory testing of fluid samples from EVALI patients has found vitamin E acetate, a synthetic form of vitamin E, at the primary site of injury within the lungs. More research is needed, however, to rule out other chemicals that might also be associated with EVALI.

Although more testing is needed, vitamin E acetate appears to be much more common in products that contain THC. Those in the legal marijuana industry say vitamin E acetate is used on the marijuana black market to stretch the THC oil in e-cigarettes because it has a similar appearance and is much cheaper.

One recent report found that among EVALI patients in Utah, 17 out of 19 (89%) of THC-containing products had vitamin E acetate, whereas 0 out of 20 (0%) of nicotine-containing products had it.

The CDC recommends that people not use vaping products that contain THC. The American Medical Association has called for a ban on all vaping and e-cigarette products that are not deemed tobacco cessation products. No vaping or e-cigarette products currently on the market are considered tobacco cessation products.

Nation slow to heed lessons

Five years later, HIV-hit Austin experiencing its rebound

By LAURA UNGER
Kaiser Health News

AUSTIN, Indiana — Ethan Howard cradled his prized Martin-brand guitar, strumming gently as he sang of happiness he thought he'd never find.

With support from his family and community, the 26-year-old is making his way as a musician after emerging from the hell of addiction, disease and stigma. The former intravenous drug user was among the first of 235 people in the Austin community to be diagnosed in the worst drug-fueled HIV outbreak ever to hit rural America.

Now, five years after the outbreak, Howard counts himself among the three-quarters of patients here whose HIV is so well controlled it's undetectable, meaning they can't spread it through sex. He's sober in a place that has new addiction treatment centers, a syringe exchange and five times more addiction support groups than before the outbreak.

But as this city of 4,100 recovers, much of the rest of the country fails to apply its lessons. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention deemed 220 U.S. counties vulnerable to similar outbreaks because of overdose death rates, the volume of prescription opioid sales and other statistics tied to injecting drugs. Yet a Kaiser Health News analysis shows that fewer than a third of them have working syringe exchanges. Such programs, which make clean needles available to drug users, have been found to reduce the spread of HIV and hepatitis C and are supported in the Trump administration's national effort to end the HIV epidemic within a decade.

Still, local backlash often stymies efforts to start such exchanges, even in Indiana, where only nine of 92 counties have one, and with federal funding up for grabs that could help them expand. And rural places in states such as Missouri, West Virginia and Kentucky are still plagued by the raw ingredients that led to Austin's tragedy: addiction, despair, poverty, doctor shortages and sparse drug treatment.

All this threatens to stall the administration's HIV goals, which are championed by two prominent figures who responded to Austin's outbreak: Indiana's former governor, now-Vice President Mike Pence, and the former state health commissioner, Dr. Jerome Adams, now the U.S. surgeon general.

Since Austin's 2015 crisis, drug-fueled outbreaks have occurred in more than a half-dozen other communities, some with syringe exchanges and some without.

"When you have these outbreaks, they affect other states and counties. It's a domino effect," said Dr. Rupa Patel, an HIV prevention researcher at Washington University in St. Louis. "We have to learn from them. Once you fall behind, you can't catch up."

Fields of corn and soybeans surround Austin, just off Interstate 65 between Louisville and Indianapolis. The city has been battered by decades of economic blows, but it retains a quaint charm, with a shop-lined, one-stoplight Main Street.

Before the outbreak, addiction to the potent opioid painkiller Opana swept through the community. People took to melting down pills and injecting them, and needle-sharing was common. Local women were caught up in sex work to pay for drugs. In some homes nearby, health officials later discovered, three generations had shot up Opana together: young adults, their parents and grandparents.

Ethan Howard is a musician who tested positive for HIV in 2015 as part of an outbreak centered around Austin, Indiana. Howard was among the first of 235 people to be diagnosed in the worst drug-fueled HIV outbreak ever to hit rural America. (Photos by Luke Sharrett for Kaiser Health News)

In 2015, Austin, Indiana, was the epicenter of an HIV outbreak when 235 people tested positive for the virus.

Yet help was scarce. Austin had no addiction treatment centers and just one doctor. Dwindling government funding in 2013 led Planned Parenthood in nearby Scottsburg to close after years of providing HIV testing and education.

So, for residents like Howard, addiction led to infection with HIV. After he was prescribed the painkiller Lortab for a football injury in high school, the teen began craving opioids. Eventually, he discovered Opana, which was plentiful on the streets of Austin and surrounding Scott County.

His mom sent him for addiction treatment during his senior year, and he got sober. But after his girlfriend gave birth to a stillborn boy in 2014, he turned back to drugs. He tested positive for HIV in March 2015. He cried with his mom in her car.

That was the month after Indiana health officials said they'd identified 30 HIV cases in the county, which previously reported three within a decade. Austin was the outbreak's epicenter.

The initial response was slow. Pence, then governor, opposed syringe exchange programs, which were illegal in Indiana. It took him 29 days after the outbreak was announced to sign an executive order allowing a state-supervised syringe program. By then, HIV cases had risen to 79.

"He waited till it was too little, too late. These needle exchanges were put into place in the most grudging manner," said Gregg Gonsalves, an HIV researcher at Yale University. "It was a disaster that didn't need to happen."

Gonsalves cited a recent Brown University study that found having a syringe exchange before the outbreak could have decreased HIV incidence there by 90%. A study he led, published in 2018, estimated that simply testing for and tracking HIV when hepatitis C spiked around 2010 could have kept HIV cases there below 10.

Instead, cases skyrocketed. The rate of infection was so high that Dr. Tom Frieden, then the CDC director, said at the time Austin's HIV incidence rate exceeded those of countries in sub-Saharan Africa. He estimated lifetime treatment costs — even before all 235 people were diagnosed — would reach $100 million.

What ultimately curbed the outbreak were solutions rooted in the community. Scott County's syringe exchange was part of a "one-stop shop," where people could also get drug treatment referrals, free HIV testing and other services. More people were referred to Medicaid, which had recently been expanded in Indiana. Police, health and recovery workers, community activists and faith leaders joined forces.

"More connections are being made," said Jacob Howell, a former drug user who is now pastor of the Church of the New Covenant in Austin. "The message to other communities is to tear down your walls, put your prejudices aside."

Surgeon General Adams said lasting change happens locally. When he traveled to Austin as Indiana's health commissioner, he listened to the sheriff's concerns about needles littering public property and met with church leaders to ease worries that syringe programs might enable drug use.

Dealing with the outbreak was more about relationships than science, he said during a January talk at the CATO Institute, a Washington-based free-market think tank. "I knew we'd never be successful without ensuring that those trusted community leaders and advocates were invested in part of the solution."

Austin's outbreak became a catalyst for action in some places. Kentucky's legislature voted to allow syringe programs in 2015, and Ohio subsequently made it easier for local health boards to develop them. Officials said that helped them respond to a cluster of HIV cases in the Cincinnati-Northern Kentucky area in 2018.

Cabell County, West Virginia, by contrast, recently pulled back on its preventive efforts. Cabell was among counties that the CDC deemed vulnerable to an outbreak. Dr. Michael Kilkenny, physician director of the Cabell-Huntington Health Department, said Austin's experience spurred his community to open a syringe program in September 2015 that eventually averaged between 1,000 and 1,200 visits a month.

But after political backlash halted a program in nearby Charleston, Cabell imposed restrictions on its program in 2018 to stave off a similar closure. People could no longer pick up needles for others or use the exchange if they lived outside the county or the city of Huntington. Visits dropped by half.

Looking back, Kilkenny said it was "the worst time we could've done that." Cabell wound up with more than 75 HIV cases, one of the biggest rural outbreaks other than the one in Austin.

Officials then lifted the restrictions, scaled up efforts linking people to testing and treatment and launched an HIV anti-stigma campaign.

Other places on the CDC's vulnerable counties list have so far escaped an outbreak. Missouri, for instance, has 13 vulnerable counties and a ban on syringe exchanges. Washington University's Patel said Missouri's failure to expand Medicaid leaves some at-risk people uninsured.

Missouri health officials said they are taking several steps to prevent HIV, such as counseling residents in vulnerable counties, providing HIV testing at health agencies and having disease intervention specialists connect people who are tested to additional help.

But legislation to allow syringe exchanges was unsuccessful in Missouri last year, as were similar bills in Iowa and Arizona.

Avoiding another HIV crisis is not rocket science, Gonsalves said. "We need to use everything we have that we know works."

In Austin, that multipronged approach is underway as those affected reclaim their lives.

Howard is well enough that he can practice his music every day until his voice gets hoarse and his fingers hurt. He performs around the region and dreams of touring honky-tonks nationally. And he's writing a song about moving through addiction and toward hope.

"I feel I've proven a lot of people wrong," he said, fiddling with his guitar pick. "I'm making my grandpa happy and my grandma happy. They're both in heaven now, but I know they're proud of me."

• Tree removal

tion but that's not the way the project played out this week.

Adler vented her frustration on Facebook with a post on her page:

"Progress and broken promises. As a member of the 421 Consulting Committee, we were told by the engineers and DOT that none of the big trees on E Main were going to be removed. i guess they just told us that to shut us up. Say goodbye to my over 100 yr old sugar maple. The new sewer line was designed to run right under it. The Norway maple across the street gets it, too, because it's in the way of their curb machine.

wish it would help. but they've already killed it. for some reason they've set 3 new catchbasins 25' apart in front of my building, one right next to this poor tree. I'm being told the entire street will be draining towards me. So, between the walk being torn up, the new water meters dug in, new catch basins dug in and 2' of pavement being removed, there aren't many roots left."

According to Madison City Arborist Tim Perry, Adler has a right to be disappointed. He's disappointed in the development, too, and he actually made the call to cut down the tree.

"It actually wasn't part of the plan but the problem was that when they were digging out for the storm sewers they ran into a bunch of roots. They dug all the roots out toward the road and cut some other roots for the storm sewer and the tree was no longer stable enough to stand. It was going to fall," Perry said. "The tree's roots were damaged and I made the call to go ahead and take it down because it was going to fall anyway."

As arborist, Perry said he looks for ways to save trees rather than lose them, but when a destabilized tree presents a hazard to citizens, motorists and homes, the safer decision is removal.

Pike's Tree Care was on the scene Thursday using chainsaws and a crane to safely remove the large maple standing just the width of a sidewalk from Adler's 1838 row house — the only three-unit row of its kind in the city — that is not only listed on the National Historic Register as a structure but also located within Madison's National Historic District.

Adler spoke fondly of the old tree lamenting not so much its passing in the name of progress but the fact that it was done despite all of her efforts toward preservation.

"It was not in perfect health. There was some rot as most older trees have. But it was killed by the way they designed the storm water system ... and the lie is the big issue here," Adler said, noting that when she would view architectural drawings of the project throughout the planning process they always showed new tree plantings and she would ask if that meant the existing trees would be removed.

"They said it was just an artist's rendition," Adler said.

A crew from Pike's Tree Care uses a crane to safely fall a maple tree in the 700 block of East Main Street in Madison. The tree was removed as part of a project to install new catch basins and storm sewers as part of the work on the Project 421 Gateway bridge approach. (Courier staff photo by Mark Campbell)

Kathie Rohlfing, chairperson of the city's Tree Board, agreed, noting that no one with the project ever came before that board asking to remove trees and a recent review of the project blueprints gave no indication that trees would be cut.

"I'm surprised," Rohlfing said after learning the tree had been cut. "Nobody spoke to us."

Adler blames the outcome on the architects and Perry agreed that the plan didn't take into account the root structure of the bigger trees, how much they spread and how they would be impacted by excavation on all four sides for the road, sidewalks and storm sewers.

Adler said she didn't blame the construction company or the tree removal service because they were just doing their jobs and following the plans.

At the same time, the impact might as well be considered permanent, at least for most of the people living in Madison now. Depending on what trees are replanted, that area of the city could be decades away from returning to the shade-lined sidewalks and fall colors the big sugar maple and a red maple slated for removal for similar reasons across the street have provided for as long as anyone can remember.

"You can talk to any of the people along this street and their front yards are all destroyed. You have to expect some of that when you build a highway, so just tell us. We all know that it's unusual to have a highway built in your front yard," said Adler. "It's progress and in 20 years nobody will know the difference. But some will wonder why all the big trees are gone."

Adler said when that time comes, she will most likely no longer be living there. In fact, she's already purchased another home in downtown Madison and plans to move. Her lingering concern is who would want to buy her home because part of Madison's charm and value is in its trees.

"I grew up here and was a child in the '60s and '70s," Adler said. "These trees have always been here."

• Wallace new chief

He has been president of the Jefferson County Justice Treatment & Prevention Program, an advisory board member for Community Corrections and the Department of Corrections and a board member of the Healthy Communities Narcotic Intervention group as well as other agencies such as United Way and American Red Cross.

A 1987 graduate of the Indiana Law Enforcement Academy, Wallace began his career in law enforcement as a patrol officer and crime scene investigator for Madison Police Department. He was promoted to detective and captain and, in 2007, was appointed chief by then Democratic Mayor Tim Armstrong. He remained in that position until he ran successfully as a Republican for Jefferson County sheriff and served the maximum two terms as sheriff.

During his previous tenure with Madison police, Wallace actively worked with federal and state agencies to curb the spread of illegal drugs in the community while also advocating for child victims of sexual crimes. As chief, Wallace re-implemented the city's K-9 program, formed Madison's first Emergency Response Team, and expanded community policing through bike patrols and neighborhood block watch programs.

As sheriff, Wallace worked to implement a school resource officer program in local schools and to establish mental health, narcotics, and GED programs in the Jefferson County Jail.

Although 13 years removed from when he was previously named chief, Wallace, now 57, said he's "still got that fire in my belly" and looking forward to the job, working with the officers at Madison and dealing with the issues facing Madison. As a second generation MPD officer whose father, John "Jack" Wallace, was a Madison police officer for 20 years, Wallace is a career lawman who also has two sons who work in law enforcement.

McKay, who was the department's assistant chief to Jeremey Perkins before Perkins was reassigned last month, will shift back to his former office as assistant chief to Wallace.

McKay joined the police department as a patrolman in 2004 and graduated from the police academy in May 2005. He was promoted to senior patrolman in 2007 and sergeant in 2010 before being named assistant chief of police in June 2017 with the rank of major. McKay was a reserve deputy with the Jefferson County Sheriff's Department before joining MPD.

McKay also serves as SWAT team commander and is trained in tactical leadership, water rescue, and fire and arson investigation. He is a volunteer firefighter with Clifty 6 Fire and Rescue, is trained in hazmat operations and is an advanced emergency medical technician.

"I would like to thank the mayor and his staff for the opportunity to serve the police department and the citizens of Madison as the assistant chief of police. I look forward to helping Chief Wallace move the department into the future," said McKay, who was a candidate for chief and one of four finalists interviewed by the search committee.

"I think Ben and I will get along great together, and I think he's just done a remarkable job as assistant chief," Wallace said of McKay. "He's got a lot of good things going that he's working on … and having him on board and having him up to speed and the office staff, and a lot of veterans as well, is going to make the transition of moving in there much easier."

However, Wallace did say it will be tough leaving his job as school resource officer because school administrators and teachers have been great to work with and the students brighten his day every day.

"What I'm going to miss most is walking down those hallways and hearing the kids' laughter ... that's what makes it tough," Wallace said of leaving the schools — especially amid the current investigation into vaping-related illnesses the SROs have been dealing with at the high school over the past several days. Wallace spent Friday delivering evidence to the state police crime lab in Indianapolis as part of that ongoing investigation.

"It's tough leaving the kids," he said, adding that as police chief he would like to get Madison Police Department "more active in our schools."

"While we are disappointed to lose SRO John Wallace, we are very excited for him as he resumes his responsibilities as chief of police," said Superintendent Jeff Studebaker. "We are honored to work with the City of Madison to create continued opportunities for our students and look forward to further collaboration with the City of Madison Police Department to further enhance school safety efforts."

Studebaker said the district will be working with the City of Madison and MPD to determine the next steps to fill the vacancy.

"We want to wish Chief Wallace and the entire Madison Police Department the absolute best as they transition to new leadership and continue to provide excellent care for our community," Studebaker added.

The city received 68 resumes from across the country for the chief's position with that list reduced to four finalists who were interviewed by a four-person search committee that included the mayor.

In addition to Courtney, the search committee included Board of Public Works & Safety member David Carlow, State Senator Jack Sandlin, a career law enforcement officer and former deputy chief with the Indianapolis Police Department, and Ripley County Prosecutor Ric Hertel.

"I appreciated the opportunity to be part of the interview panel for Madison's police chief selection process. Mayor Courtney has made public safety improvement a major focus for the community," Sandlin said. "While there were several quality candidates in the process, I believe that the mayor has selected the right person at the right time. As a career law enforcement officer, I know that organizational change does not always come easy. However, I also understand that the officers will know this is an opportunity to grow the organization."

"Knowing the people and knowing the town probably gave me an advantage," Wallace said. "And knowing our needs certainly didn't hurt me any that's for sure."

Internal disagreements lead to Bomholt's resignation as boys coach at Southwestern

By DAVID CAMPBELL
Courier Staff Writer
dcampbell@madisoncourier.com

Jerry Bomholt's highly-successful tenure as head boys basketball coach at Southwestern High School came to a sudden and shocking end on Wednesday but the veteran coach says that he was forced from the job, not by the administration but by the players themselves.

Just five days after Southwestern upset Class 2A No. 4 South Decatur and the same day the Rebels received six votes in the latest Associated Press poll, Bomholt tendered his resignation effective immediately. It was a stunning end for a coach who was nearing 550 career wins and had rebuilt the Southwestern program from a one-win team six years ago to the No. 1-ranked team in the state last season.

In an emotional interview late Wednesday night, the veteran coach told his side of the story and said that his decision to step aside came with the team's best interests at heart even at personal loss to himself and his family.

On Monday, Bomholt met with a player representing the team who told the coach there were several concerns in the lockerroom. According to Bomholt, two of the "concerns" involved players who the coach said he had already talked with and reached an agreement. But then the conversation took a turn.

"After all of those negatives were shared and I had addressed them, I said, 'Can you tell me what it is that you want?' and there was no answer. So I asked again," Bomholt said. "And then it hit me, and I said, 'Are you guys asking me to quit because the majority of players in there feel that way?' and the player that was in there with me said 'yes'. So that kind of set it off. That was an absolute shock to me because we were coming off the best weekend of the year and I just have a feeling that after Saturday's game somehow this was all put together. There was no indication before this happened."

What followed was two days of meetings, with the player, Bomholt, athletic director Tom Scroggins, principal Matt Owens and superintendent Jeff Bates in various different combinations. By Tuesday morning, Bomholt had decided to tender his resignation. Scroggins wanted Bomholt to take 24 hours to think about it and on Wednesday, the coach decided to make it final.

Bomholt said his reasoning for the resignation came down to what was best for the team. While he believes in his heart that he did nothing wrong, he also didn't want to be the cause of a team splintering and taking sides in the lockerroom.

"When it came down to it, it looked like that if I continued to coach, that it was going to be extremely difficult. First of all, obviously, we were going to be a little short on players if there were that many that didn't want to play," said Bomholt, voice breaking. "Secondly, to try to coach in that situation was going to be extremely difficult. People that wanted me to call their bluff don't understand because you're going to be coaching a split team, maybe coaching kids, if they stayed, who didn't want to stay, and some kids that feel very good toward you. Then we've got a split. We've got a sectional coming up, so I came up to the conclusion that probably the best thing for the team was to step away. There is still probably going to exist a split, but I hope they can solve that."

Always known as a fiery coach, Bomholt admitted that he can be hard to play for but he said he's always had the players' best interests at heart.

"When a player needs to be motivated, I've motivated them. But when they deserved praise, I've praised them," Bomholt said. "Just last week I had one of the players pull me aside

Madison has record setting day at sectional

sports@madisoncourier.com

Madison's 200-yard freestyle relay team will go into Saturday's finals as the sectional favorite after an impressive record-breaking performance on at Thursday's preliminaries.

The Cub quartet of Carter Schutte, Jack Kelsey, Liam Roney and Justin Banks clocked in at 1:33.85, breaking the school record of 1:33.93 set by Stuart Spaulding, Josh Kokot, Kyler Mahoney, and Hunter Brown in 2010. It was also almost half a second ahead of the runner-up team from Floyd Central.

The performance of the 200 free relay team was just one highlight in an impressive performance overall for area swimmers at the IHSAA Boys Swimming Sectional Preliminaries at Floyd Central on Thursday.

Madison had swimmers qualify for the finals in an astonishing 17 events on the day with 10 others reaching the consolation round. Of that group, seven will go into the finals seeded in the top three with a chance to advance to the state finals.

Switzerland County advanced in four events to the finals with three others reaching the consolation round, Southwestern had three finals qualifiers and four in the consolation round and Shawe swimmer Ale Giaveri qualified for the consolations in two events.

All four Madison swimmers on that top-seeded relay team also qualified for the finals in individual events.

Schutte, a sophomore, placed third in the the 100 freestyle in 49.93, breaking the record of 50.10 set by Chris Bear in 1980 and tied by Tom Solomon in 1986. He was also third in the 100 backstroke in 57.55.

Banks, a freshman, picked up two second-place finishes, in the 200 individual medley in 2:06.00 and the 100 breaststroke in 1:01.87. Schutte, a sophomore, was third in and, Roney, a freshman, was fifth in the 200 freestyle in 1:53.95 and seventh in the 100 butterfly in 57.89, and Kelsey, a sophomore, was sixth in the 50 freestyle in 23.67.

Schutte, Banks and Kelsey also teamed with Trenton Schmidt to place second in the 200 medley relay in 1:43.80 to break the school record of 144.36 set by Schutte, Dillon Ray, Eoin McMahon Kelsey just last year while Schmidt was fifth in the 100 butterfly in 57.89 and seventh in the 200 IM in 2:12.95.

Other finals qualifiers for Madison were: Peyton Ford, Leighton Wielgoszinski, Bladyn Cardinal and Roney, third, 400 free relay, 3:39.53; Wielgoszinski, fifth, 500 free, 5:25.18; Cardinal, seventh, 500 free, 5:33.54 and eighth, 200 free, 1:56.35; Luke Bryant, eighth, 100 fly, 1:02.79; and Ford, eighth, 100 back, 1:01.78.

For the night, we had 24 swims, we have 23 set to compete in the finals on Saturday with representation in every event. We had 24 best times logged on the night," Madison coach Ashley Schutte said. "To say these kids rose to the occasion is an understatement!"

Switzerland County's Adrian Armstrong qualified for the finals in two individual events and two relays. The sophomore was second in the 100 butterfly in 56.11 and sixth in the 200 IM in 2.09.51. He then teamed with Nathan Furnish, Michael Stanton and Alexis Nall played like the All-American that she is, taking over the game down the stretch to lead Hanover College women's basketball to a huge 64-57 win over No. 6/9 Transylvania in a Heartland Collegiate Athletic Conference first-place battle at home on Wednesday.

The Panthers, whose only loss since the calendar rolled over to 2020 was by 18 points last month at Transylvania, never trailedl after the game's first eight minutes but still needed all the heroics they could get down the stretch to spring the upset.

Nall was more than happy to oblige. The senior from Mount Vernon was limited to just seven points in the first half, but she exploded for 21 in the second, including 15 in the fourth quarter as Hanover held off Transylvania's late charge.

"That was probably the most intense game I have played, well, I don't want to say in my entire career, but my entire career," Nall said, smiling. "My team came out as a unit and we were so well-prepared. Transy is a great program, coached by a great coach and we knew that it was going to be a dogfight from the opening tip. We all said all week that it was going to come down to the final buzzer and it came down to the final buzzer."

Hanover (17-6, 16-1 HCAC) led 29-24 at halftime and quickly built that lead to 12 (36-24) on a Nall layup and tell me that he wanted me to keep coaching him hard and staying on him because he wanted to be the best player that he could be.

"I'm old-fashioned I guess. That's what coaching is to me," Bomholt said. "I guess that's not what it means to this team."

Scroggins, who played for Bomholt at Southwestern and worked under the coach at Shawe, said that he supported Bomholt but had hoped to change his mind. But he also said that he fully supports the team, coach Zac Nussbaum and the rest of the staff.

"As far as we are concerned, myself, Mr. Owens and Mr. Bates wanted Jerry to stay on and we told him that we would support him but this was his decision. We did not ask for his resignation," Scroggins said. "My point of view now is to try to be positive looking forward and do what's best for the team and the players looking ahead. It's a rough situation but now we just need to stay positive. The people in this community should not put the blame on the kids when this was ultimately Coach's decision.

Bomholt coached the Rebels for 11 seasons over two different stints spanning 22 years, compiling a record of 164-95 over that time and he is 549-344 overall. He took Southwestern to the state championship game in 1998 and led the Rebels to a winning season in 2002 before stepping down with health issues. Southwestern did not have another winning season until Bomholt returned six years ago and has won the last two sectional crowns. The Rebels are considered the sectional favorite this year as well.

Bomholt said he wasn't sure what he would do next. He had often expressed the desire to reach 600 career wins but said on Wednesday that he was probably going to retire after next season when the majority of this current team graduates. Now he's not sure what to do.

He and his wife, Dede, have talked about possibly moving away from the area. She is retired from Hanover College and with his children grown and no coaching job, he doesn't have much to keep him in the area.

"Easily this could be the end of my coaching career and I didn't want to end it on this note. I have established some things," Bomholt said. "Regardless of what some of these people think, I am extremely well-respected."

Assistant coach Zac Nussbaum has been named the interim head coach while fellow assistants Larry Wynn and Rick Stockdale have agreed to stay on board. The Rebels have only two regular-season games left — at Scottsburg on Saturday and at home against South Dearborn next Friday — before the state tournament begins March 3.

Hanover lacrosse loses at Centre

sports@madisoncourier.com

Centre scored five goals in each of the first two quarters to pull away to a 12-2 win over Hanover in men's lacrosse Thursday in Danville, Kentucky.

The host Colonels led 10-0 at halftime and 12-0 before Hanover finally got on the scoreboard with a goal by Ian Kimmins with 3:34 left in the third period. Noah King, who had assisted on Kimmins' goal, scored his own goal with 1:44 to play in the fourth for the final margin.

Centre held a 37-23 advantage in shots as well as a 29-28 lead in ground balls. Hanover goalie Noah Dubrava had six saves in 52 minutes of action to take the loss.

Hanover, now 1-1 on the season, travels to Concordia Wisconsin on Wednesday and to Carthage Missouri on Friday, Feb. 28.

After four road matches to start the season, Hanover will play its first home match on Wednesday, March 4, when the Panthers host Trine.

with 8:39 left in the third quarter before Transy came roaring back. The Pioneers ripped off a 12-0 run over the next four minutes to tie the game and seize the momentum.

But the Panthers never folded. Nall stopped the run with a jumper and Hanover rebuilt a 42-38 lead by the end of the quarter. Hanover then traded baskets throughout most of the fourth quarter.

"It was senior leadership. These seniors just know what to do and they carry the team on their back," Hanover coach John Jones said. "The best-led teams are player-led and I've got a player-led team."

Those seniors dominated the final moments of the game to seal the win. Hanover led 58-51 with 1:33 to play but Transy quickly cut that margin down, pulling to within one after an Ashton Woodard 3-pointer with 1:01 to go.

But Nall bullied her way to the basket for two points with 28 seconds left. After Hanover got a defensive stop, senior Kristin Mills ripped down the rebound and hit both free throws to push the margin back to five with 11 seconds to go.

A Transylvania turnover on the other end turned into two Nall free throws with nine seconds left to ice the win.

Transylvania was held to a season-low 32% (18-for-57) from the floor, including just 3-of-22 from 3-point range. The Pioneers did go 18-for-22 from the free-throw line to stay in the game.

"The difference in this game was defense. We held the conference's second-best shooting team to its lowest percentage all season," Jones said. "It was just a great, all-around team win."

Hanover shot only 33% (23-for-70) itself but committed only eight turnovers in the game. Nall had 26 points, seven rebounds and three assists while going 7-for-7 from the free-throw line to lead the way.

"What can you say about Nall? Twenty-six and seven, five player of the week awards and the first question is how did you do it and she's all about teammates and sharing the ball," Jones said. "She's the best player in the conference. She's my player and she plays for Hanover so of course I'm going to say that, but she is."

Mills finished the game with 13 points, nine rebounds and three assists while Savannah Courtney had 13 points and seven rebounds. Katie Hartman added eight points, six rebounds and three assists while Brooke Todd had four points and four rebounds.

Woodard scored 20 points and Miranda Otero had 13 off the bench to lead Transylvania, which fell to 22-2 overall and 16-1 in the HCAC.

The win means that Hanover and Transylvania enter the final Saturday of the regular season tied atop the HCAC standings. Hanover hosts Rose-Hulman while Transy hosts Bluffton. Transylvania holds all of the tiebreakers and would host the conference semifinals and championship next week in the event of a tie, but Hanover still wants a chance to share the regular-season title.

"I think this was a step back and us saying that Hanover basketball is here to play, we're ready to go and we're not somebody to mess with," Nall said. "We're ready to do what we have to do to win a ring and bring a championship home for Jonesy and the rest of our coaching staff."

BRIDGE

LIGHTNING STRIKES FROM TIME TO TIME

Willie Tyler, a ventriloquist, comedian and actor, said, "The reason lightning doesn't strike twice in the same place is that the same place isn't there the second time."

Good point. In bridge, we have a Lightner double, which strikes a few times a year, but on different deals, and probably with different players. What does it mean?

After East opened three diamonds, South overcalled three spades. North, with a huge hand, used Blackwood. Then, learning that an ace was missing, he signed off in six spades. Three players picked up their scorecards to inscribe the contract, but East said, "Just a moment, please. I double." North redoubled, arguing afterward that it was mathematically justifiable.

What did West lead?

He knew that his partner's Lightner double asked for an unusual lead. Diamonds (East's suit) and trumps were out. West had to choose between hearts and clubs, knowing that partner was void in one of those suits. Since he had one more heart, he led that suit. East happily ruffed and cashed the diamond ace to defeat the slam.

East-West were plus 400 -- double what they would have received if North had not redoubled. If the contract had made, North-South would have scored 2070 instead of 1660 for doubled and made. So North was risking 200 points to gain 410.

When Teddy Lightner first had this idea, he doubled a small slam with a side-suit void and an ace. When an opponent redoubled, he was feeling happy. But there was a problem -- it was his lead!

Student recycling

Milton 6th graders learn to reduce, reuse

Milton Elementary School in Milton, Kentucky, is teaming up with Trimble County Waste Management and Judge Executive Todd Pollock to start a recycling program at the school.

The Trimble County Waste Management department donated a recycling dumpster and talked to the sixth grade students about Problem Solving Plastics, which addressed the impact of man-made materials on the environment.

Teacher Ashley Troxell and her sixth grade science students plan to lead a schoolwide effort to reduce and reuse in collaboration with Michaela Dziedzic, the solid waste coordinator for Trimble County. (Submitted photo)

Lost appetite at mom and pop restaurant with annoying man

Annie Lane

Dear Annie: My parents live in a tiny Midwestern town with one restaurant. It's a mom and pop place with really delicious food, and many of the locals are regulars, including my parents. The owner, "Martina," is extremely sweet and accommodating and does most of the work including the cooking. Her husband, on the other hand, does very little except sit down at the tables with customers and annoy them. He brings up politics, religion and other topics that repeatedly offend customers. It's the Midwest, so everyone is too polite to say, "GO AWAY!" They also really enjoy Martina and her cooking. No one wants to hurt her feelings, so no one has let her know that he's driving away business with his behavior.

Martina seems oblivious to how much he annoys people. She mentions how tight money is and how hard it is to stay above water in her business, and I want to tell her that banning her husband would certainly improve her income. Is there a polite way to do so?

Personally, I can't stand him and only get carryout when I visit my parents, but I know that the locals appreciate having a place to catch up with neighbors and prefer to eat there. Several have stopped going because of him. Is there a way to let her know how he's affecting her bottom line without offending her? — Ban the Booth Bully

Dear Ban the Booth Bully: I'm sure this woman is aware her husband is a thorn in her restaurant's side. If he's that prickly in public, just imagine what a bramble he is at home. Perhaps her seeming obliviousness is a coping mechanism: She can't convince her husband to change his behavior, so she does her best to tune it out. So rather than go to her with the issue, I think you ought to address it right at the source. The next time you're in town, dine in at the restaurant. If and when this bully tries to push his way into your conversation, summon up the courage to push back (with words, of course). Politely but firmly say, "I'm not interested in discussing politics or religion," or "Respectfully, my parents and I haven't seen each other in a while and would like some time to catch up on our own here," or something to that effect. Once word gets around, others may follow suit. At the very least, you'll have given Martina something to point to should her husband insist that customers don't mind his antics.

Remember: It's not rude to stand up to rudeness.

Dear Annie: I am writing in response to the advice you gave to the letter writer "A Little Gratitude." The letter writer was very frustrated at the double standard her mother had regarding the giving and receiving of packages via the mail.

In short, it's a petty, childish problem and not worth getting upset over.

If that's all it takes to frustrate someone they should count their blessings. Either they have way too much time on their hands or way too little stress in their life. I wasted way too many years on similar circumstances with my mother, who was suffering from a form of dementia for nearly 20 years before it was diagnosed. There were not the usual, obvious symptoms. Psychological disorders are abundant and have no age limits.

Confronting someone over such matters rarely results in a positive outcome. You can't control what other people do, only the way you react to it. — Been There, Done Enough of That

Dear Been There: That is perhaps the single universal piece of advice. It's a point worth reminding ourselves of on the regular, and I appreciate your bringing it up.
